In the anime "Air Gear" (an upgraded version of the manga, if that matters), the characters engage in the "Shougi Ban" (which is an advanced form of the gambling game "Shogi") to get acquainted, and the following exchange occurs: (This is a summary of their conversation, courtesy of @jotaku) Anzu: How long have we been doing this? Kojiro: All our lives. Anzu: I feel like we've only just begun. Kojiro: With this, you will learn everything there is to know about playing Shogi. Anzu: There's nothing left to learn. So which one of these two things is what he's referring to? I don't recall this being explicitly mentioned before, but I also don't recall anyone saying that they were familiar with the rules of Shogi, either, so I doubt it's this. (Note: There were no "answer" answers posted. The first question was about the Shougi Ban, but the point of the exchange was whether Anzu is thinking of something else, not how it works.) A: I'm going to answer this question myself. Shogi, like Mahjong, is a game of patters on a board. In this case, the board is a flat, two dimensional grid of 22 by 22 squares, centered around the two players' pieces. The pieces, called "men" in this game, can be placed on the squares as shown in the image below: My research on this subject has thus far revealed that, in the game of Shogi, each player spends 25 points of their own energy to place their "men" on 3e33713323
